

WORKSHOP SERIES

Understanding Collaborative Contracting and Its Implications

WORKSHOP OVERVIEW

Since as early as 2017, the government has been encouraging a shift towards collaborative contracting models, which seek to overcome issues that frequently arise from the adoption of more conventional approaches. Collaborative contracting models are premised on the belief that a more co-operative, as opposed to adversarial, working relationship can lead to mutual benefits for both the project owner and project participants in the wider and longer term. While the public sector has taken the lead, it is hoped that there will be increased uptake within the private sector in future, as the industry deepens its understanding of collaborative contracting and its implications.

INSIGHTS

In this workshop, the speakers will

- Examine the fundamental principles and elements of collaborative contracting, and how it compares with traditional contracting.
- Different collaborative contracting frameworks with varying degrees of risk/reward-sharing and cooperation will also be considered.
- Cover some of the key collaborative provisions under standard forms of contract such as the PSSCOC and NEC3 and NEC4.
- Discuss and share factors that contribute to successful implementation, potential challenges and pitfalls, as well as actual examples of collaborating contracting.

Ms Sheryl Ang

Partner

Dentons Rodyk & Davidson LLP

Sheryl is a partner in Dentons Rodyk's Litigation and Dispute Resolution practice group. Her main area of practice is commercial litigation and arbitration, with a focus on complex construction and engineering disputes. She has acted for and advised a wide range of local and overseas contractors in both domestic and international construction arbitrations administered by arbitration institutions such as the Singapore International Arbitration Centre and International Chamber of Commerce.

Sheryl also has extensive experience in acting for both employers and contractors in prosecuting and defending construction-related claims in adjudication proceedings commenced under the Building and Construction Industry Security of Payment Act. Sheryl has also advised and acted for contractors accused of regulatory offences such as causing damage to infrastructure while carrying out construction works. In terms of front-end work, Sheryl has assisted clients with drafting and reviewing general and bespoke terms and conditions for use in construction contracts.

Apart from construction and engineering disputes, Sheryl undertakes a broad range of work including other commercial disputes and shareholder and director disputes. She has also advised insurers in relation to coverage, liability and quantum issues arising under various classes of insurance, including Public Liability, Contractors' / Erection All Risk, Business Interruption, Directors' & Officers' Liability, Professional Indemnity, Health / Life Insurance and other policies, and represented insurers and/or their insured as defence and recovery counsel in various actions heard at both the State Courts and High Court levels.
